Admiralty Office, Jan. 7.

Immortalité, at anchor on the edge of the Bank de Brac, Boulogne, S. E. half S. four or five miles, Wednesday, January 4, 1804.

MY LORD,—Having last night reinforced the crew of the Archer with some men from this ship, and pushed her in close a-shore, she was so fortunate as to fall in with and capture the French lugger gun-vessel, No. 432, mounting an eighteen and a twelve pounder, commanded by an Ensign de Vaisseau, with five seamen, a lieutenant, and twenty-six granadiers of the thirty-sixth regiment of the line, some of whom, with two seamen, escaped in her boat during the running fight, which she continued for a quarter of an hour with her stern gun and musketry. The Archer had part of her rigging cut, but received no material hurt on either side.

The Archer and Griffin afterwards captured a dogger, a schuyt, and two Blankenburg fishing boats, which the prisoners report to be part of a convoy, which, with a pendre of sixteen guns, and five or six gun-vessels, escaped under the land in the dark; some, I understand, laden with provisions and stores. The schuyt has gun, and the fishing boats timbers and knees for boats; each vessel had three or four soldiers on board.

Lieutenant Sherriff, of the Archer, has done every thing I could possibly wish or expect from his zeal and Lieutenant Payne, of this ship, who commanded the boat and party assisting the Archer, executed that service with his usual alacrity; and the commander of the Griffin has my thanks for the share he bore in bringing off the latter vessels, which was effected under a very heavy fire from the shore, to which they were as close as possible.

I have the honor to be, &c.

The Right Hon. Lord Keith, K. B. &c. &c.

On Sunday afternoon four of the Hamburgh mails that were due came to hand.

An article from the banks of the Maine states, that the Emperor Alexander has made application to the French Government for the evacuation of Hanover, and at the same time required that an indemnification should be made to the King of Sardinia, which if not complete, should at least amount to some-third part of the value of the states he had lost; and that this indemnification should be assigned him on the continent of Italy. The Court of Vienna, at the invitation of that of St. Petersburgh, supported both these propositions. Bonaparte, however, expressly declared that he could not consent to the evacuation of the territory of Hanover, before the restoration of peace; and that the indemnification of the King of Sardinia, should it be agreed to, could not be carried into effect till peace was concluded with England. In these negociations, it is added, the other great powers have taken no part. With respect to Egypt and Turkey, the same authority says, we can be fully confirmed; a notification to this effect having lately been made by the Ministers of both those Powers at the Court of Vienna.

The whole of the Turkish Empire continues in a very unsettled state. A letter from Vienna mentions that some fresh disturbances have taken place at Constantinople, while in Syria, Abdallah, the late Pacha of Damascus, has put himself at the head of 15,000 rebels, and is laying waste the country with fire and sword, in revenge for having been deprived of his government, by Djezzar Pacha. There are also disturbances in European Turkey, a body of rebels having advanced against Adrianople, and laid siege to that city. In addition to these facts, a letter from Constantinople of the 14th of November, contains the following intelligence:—

"The City of Alexandria, in Egypt, is closely besieged by the Beys. According to some accounts, Ali Pasha, the Turkish Commandant, has abandoned his town to the Mamelukes, and continued himself to the defence of the citadel.

"The Capitan Pacha has received orders from the Grand Seignior to return to this city. He has already arrived at the Dardanelles, with three ships of the line. The rest of the fleet continues off the Morea, under the command of the Turkish Vice-Admiral."

A letter from Constantinople, of the 9th November, states, that Mr. Drummond, our Ambassador at the Ottoman Porte, has been recalled on account of his perilous state of health, and is succeeded by Mr. Stratton, formerly Secretary to the Embassy, under the title of Minister Plenipotentiary.

Although the Paris news contained in the German papers is of no later date than the 16th ult. yet we find several curious articles with which the Dutch Journals had not acquainted us. Among others, it is stated, that Nunneries are to be re-established at Paris, but whether upon the old plan of absolute celibacy, or with certain modifications of the rigour which was formerly practised in those religious communities, is not specified. It is also said, that the First Consul, in a late Council of State, professed sentiments very favourable to the liberty of the press; but they were accompanied with exceptions that involve newspapers and pamphlets: These are still to be subject to censorial examination;—so that, if this piece of intelligence should be true, Bonaparte, in direct contradiction to his professions, continues to lay his oppressive hand on the very great organs of the press—and, with them, in his powers and under the controul of his caprice; and resentment, the rest is sous et preterea nihil.

We have been assured that official intelligence has been received by Governor ——, stating, that Bonaparte has issued the most positive orders for the immediate sailing of the Brest fleet, as soon as the weather and the temporary absence of the British fleet will admit.

The Gazette of Saturday, in a letter which we have extracted, states the result of the firing which was heard at Deal and Dover on Tuesday and Wednesday.—From the accounts which reached town on Thursday and Friday, it was expected some great achievement had been accomplished by our cruizers, and the London papers of those days amused their readers with a tale about the capture of 20 or 30 sail of the enemy's vessels! The action it is seen was of no further import, than as it proves our security from the famed French flotilla, whilst the smallest British vessels can make such havoc amongst it.

We are concerned to state the loss of the Grappler gun-vessel, by part of the flotilla from Granville. The Grappler, in getting under weigh from Chosse, struck upon one of the numerous rocks with which the sea in the neighbourhood of those islands is studded; and while in this situation was attacked and destroyed by the enemy's boats from the opposite coast. The crew were carried prisoners to Granville, excepting the master and ten men, who had previously left it in a boat, and are arrived at Guernsey.

The King's name is going to Covent-Garden theatre last Thursday, was to avoid the public confusion that the annunciation to him there of the French attempting to land, which was then hourly expected, must inevitably have occasioned. His Majesty's most magnificent is all ready, packed at Buckingham House, and is to be removed to Chelmsford, on the first appearance of the enemy on the eastern coast.

A Dublin mail of the 3d instant arrived on Sunday.—Mr. Wickham, Secretary for Ireland, it appears, has been obliged to retire from public business on account of ill health.

A court martial is at present sitting, at Chelsea college, on General Burton, for sending a challenge to an inferior officer. The Court is composed of officers of the first distinction, and the General is a man of high honour, and an excellent soldier.—The arrest was notified by his Majesty, through Secretary Yorke, to Parliament, a few days previous to the recess.

At an entertainment given by Mr. J. W. Hull, of Great Baddow, Essex, last week, there were, among other delicacies, gree peas and strawberries.

Singular Accident.—The neighbourhood of Hammersmith has of late been kept in a constant state of alarm, in consequence of the nocturnal appearance of what credulity termed a Ghost. For many weeks past the church bell no sooner struck one, than a spectre seemed to flit along the fields, adjacent the Black Lion-lane—The old and young watched at's coming, but preserved an awful distance. It appeared as if covered with a white sheet. The repeated visits of this disturber of the repose of night called forth more than ordinary attention of the inhabitants, for which reason a watch was set to discover the imposture, and, as the most likely means, offered a reward of 10*l.* for the apprehension of the Ghost. A person named Smith, a Custom-house officer, with a few others, lured by the hope of the reward, determined to watch the phantom, and for that purpose provided themselves with a gun, and took post in the Black Lion-lane. They were stationed there on Tuesday night last, between the hours of ten and twelve, when a man of the name of Milwood, by trade a bricklayer, who had sent his wife out on some business, and imagined the staid longer than was necessary, determined to go in search of her, in order to conduct her home at that dreary time of night.—The ill-fated man was dressed as usual in his white flannel jacket; and having parted with his sister at his own door, proceeded along Black Lion-lane, where the ghost-hunters were lying in wait. Smith, no sooner beheld something white approaching, than he imagined it was the real object of his expectations, and instantly springing forward, advanced close to the unfortunate Milwood, levelled his piece, and shot him through the head.—The poor man fell to the ground, the ball having entered his mouth, and gone out at the back part of his skull. He was conveyed to the Black Lion public-house, and there recognized. His murderer, agitated at the effect of his rashness, surrendered himself to an officer of justice. An inquisition was taken upon the unfortunate body by Mr. Hodgson, one of the coroners for Middlesex. The first witness called was Mr. Lock, a wine-merchant at Hammersmith, who related, that as he was going home late on Tuesday night, he was accosted by Francis Smith, who told him he had killed a man, whom he believed to have been the Ghost. He said Smith did not appear to think he had done any harm, till the witness suggested to him, that even if he had killed the person who had disturbed the village by his late conduct, he had acted very unjustifiably, and it was very possible he had murdered an innocent man: He then appeared much agitated, and more so when it was discovered who the murdered man was. The sister of the deceased also said, that her brother was about 28 years of age, and was a bricklayer by profession. On the evening of Tuesday last he left the house between ten and eleven o'clock, and the witness was almost immediately struck with a presentiment that some accident would befall him; she accordingly went to the door, and stood on some bricks, in order to look out for him. He had not gone above fifty yards before she heard a voice exclaim, "Damn you! who are you? and what are you? Speak, or I'll shoot!" The words had scarcely passed the lips of the person who uttered them, when she heard the report of a gun, and saw the flash. She called to her brother, who returned no answer. Dreadfully agitated, she ran to awake her father and mother, telling them she was afraid her poor brother was shot. They would not attend to her, but said it was impossible. She repaired to the room of a young man who slept in the house, but she also refused to rise. She then resolved to go by herself, and see what was become of her brother; when she reached Cross-lane, she saw him lying on his back, his head and legs stretched across. She called out, "Brother!" but he was silent. She then stooped down to look at him, and perceived his face was bloody and entirely black. She shrieked, and her cries brought her father and mother, who, when they saw their poor dead son, were struck with grief. The body was taken away to the Black Lion. She said her brother industriously maintained himself and his wife. He was in his usual dress, a white jacket and trowsers, when he went out. She was positive, speaking upon her oath, that the money had been returned the Ghost. He had told her he had been at work there for it. Girdler, a watchman, related his having agreed with Smith to apprehend the person who had alarmed the inhabitants of Hammersmith for months past; and that he had on the Thursday preceding seen this figure, which was tall, unlike the deceased, and on his speaking the figure lifted up his hands, and he saw under the sheet the appearance of a dark coat with metal buttons. It was inconceivable what alarm and dread this fellow had excited in the neighbourhood.—The coroner having summed up the evidence, and stated that no jury on that sheet could justify a man to arm himself with a deadly weapon, to take away the life even of the person who so misbehaved, the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder, on which Smith was committed to take his trial at the Old Bailey.

To the satisfaction of most of the inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood of Hammersmith, the real Ghost has at last been discovered in the person and conduct of a Son of Crispin.—The much-lamented sacrifice of poor Milwood, the bricklayer, had such a powerful effect, that last Thursday evening an information was lodged before Mr. Hill, the magistrate, against a housekeeper in the town of Hammersmith, a boot and shoe-maker, who has a wife and three children, for going out at night muffled up in a blanket, with a design to represent a Ghost!—He was consequently taken into custody, and examined before the said magistrate, who, doubtful how to act without advice in such a case, has taken bail for his appearance. The people of Hammersmith expected that the Ghost was on Sunday to have stood publicly in the church, wrapped up in a white sheet, by way of penance, and such numbers were consequently collected to behold such a spectacle!—Crispin, when questioned by the magistrate as to the cause of his assuming such a disguise, replied, that he had been determined to be revenged on the impertinence of his apprentices, who had terrified his children by telling them stories of Ghosts. He expected to check them of this disagreeable beat of their mind to the prejudice of his children by presenting them, as they passed homewards, a figure of a Ghost, which, it seems, he managed very successfully. Had this weak, perhaps wicked, frolic ended here, it is likely that no serious consequences would have ensued. It would engross too much of the reader's attention to state minutely the disgraceful result of his different experiments. Women and children have nearly lost their senses. One poor woman, in particular, who was far advanced in her pregnancy of a second child, was so much shocked at this supposed Ghost, that she took to her bed, where she still lies in great danger.—The Ghost had so much alarmed a sturdy waggoner belonging to Mr. Russell, driving a team of eight horses, and which had sixteen passengers at the time, that the driver took to his heels, and left waggon and horses, so precipitately, that the whole were greatly endangered. In short nobody was proof against the dreadful panic excited by the appearance of the supposed supernatural figure.

TAX on PROPERTY.

TO THE PRINTER OF THE STAMFORD MERCURY.

SIR,

I have a notion that most people understand that every sum from £60 and upwards pays one shilling in the pound to the Property Tax, which may prevent some of them from giving a full and fair account of their property. It would, I think, be kind in you to explain to the public that all sums from £60 to £70 pay only 8*d.* in the pound; from £70 to £80, 6*d.* in the pound; and so on to £190, which is the first sum that pays one shilling in the pound.
